Dear Sally,

Included in my purchase is a 2 year warranty (attached with the printed receipt).

Further attached is a photo of a 3rd party repair vendor with full car wrap advertising.
This firm repairs Samsung products in Houston. As stated in a previous email this is an extremely common business practice when the manufacturer is overseas.

I expect the warranty to be honored.

inside and it is not working, clearly it is broken

Hello Sally,

The product broke while under warranty. The normal compensation is one of the following:

1) replace the failed product with a new one

OR,

2) full refund of the purchase price - in this case $59 -

OR,

3) send to a repair facility within country to fix the issues.

If you don't have a contract repair facility in the U.S. (of which there are literally hundreds of these companies) I have offered to open up the product to see if the rattling is caused by a broken part which is clearly and easily identifiable and also which appears easily fixable. If I think I have the capability to fix it you could mail me the needed parts.

With the exception of me doing the diagnosis and repair (if it looks like I can), all three alternatives are standard of the industry. Your firm should set up a policy based on one of those 3 alternatives. Generally the cost of manufacture is MUCH cheaper than the retail sales price so most companies prefer to send a new replacement product if they don't have a repair facility in country because the cost is less than giving a full refund. If the cost of repairs is more expensive than replacement, a company would generally choose to replace the product. Essentially the choice from a wise company is the least expensive cost to the company that results in the full restoration of the product or a full refund.

I will be satisfied with any of the 3 alternatives above. I liked the product, before it stopped functioning.

Sincerely,

Matt Huber

Hello Sally,

Your offers continue to be inadequate. What is worse, your company clearly has no integrity.

You act like this is a negotiation when the negotiation ended with the purchase which included the promise to warrant the item for 2 years. I fully expect your company to honor the warranty.

I have attempted to file a dispute with PayPal multiple times, including minutes ago, through their text messaging system. On occasion I have actually gotten into their dispute system but it does not allow me to answer the questions honestly without being re-routed out of the computer dispute system.

I will further be filing a dispute with my credit card company.

Failing to satisfactorily honor the 2 year warranty, by Zaraka Company or PayPal, I will stop doing business with both companies in all capacities. I have already written a monthly publication to which I subscribe that they will need to provide another payment method other than PayPal or I will stop doing business with them because I refuse to do business with companies that lack integrity.

I have 2 cases of dealing with Chinese companies with no integrity just this year. The other posed as if it were located in Miami and claimed it would ship face masks within 24 hours of being ordered - that was in late March. I cancelled the order the next day and they kept lying and emailing me the product had already shipped so couldn't be cancelled. Three weeks later the tracking number was still not in the US postal system. 5 weeks later the product had still not arrived. In this case my credit card company had integrity and reversed the charge.

I would prefer to stop doing business with all businesses with no integrity and make complaints on every complaint board I can find, starting with RipOffReport.com, to warn others away from doing business with companies such as yours.

I expect nothing less than restitution in full or replacement of the failed product. Failing that I prefer to do my utmost to warn American consumers from doing business with Zaraka Company and other Chinese businesses with no integrity.

Sincerely,

Matt Huber
